estimate that the Bryan managers had not less than $2,500,000 for use in that campaign. It was conceded on all sides that the McKinley managers had as much, and by many they were credited with possessing a much more substantial campaign fund. All kinds of politicians agree that the two national committees had at least $5,000,000 to spend in the fight of four years ago, and the same authorities are unanimous in declaring that the two committees will have fully as much this year. For every dollar that the national committees spend it is a conservative estimate that the State committees of the two parties will spend four, and this will make up the total of $25,000,000 that the election will cost.

To show where so much money goes, a study of the cost of campaign speeches alone is very instructive. Each national committee spends at least $500,000 for speeches, and the State committees spend ten times as much more. The is one item of eleven millions. The Republican national committee this year will send out twenty-five hundred speakers from the headquarters in Chicago. The Democrats will send out an equal number. These speakers cost on the average $110 a week, that sum including salaries to the spellbinders and an expense allowance of $8 a day. Some of the campaign speakers receive salaries as high as $250 a week, while others are content with $25 a week and their expenses. The average cost of these speakers to the committee is $110 a week, and they are on the stump eight weeks.

While the national committee of each party thus will have five thousand five hundred speakers out, the various State committees will have ten times as many more on the stump. The salaries of speakers engaged by the State committees may be less than those paid by the national managers, but the State committees have to pay the rental of all the buildings in which campaign meetings are held. This item adds tremendously to the total.

One of the most expensive items in the campaign next to the speakers is that of printing and stationery. For this each national committee spends at least $500,000. The number and size of the documents sent out have increased with each campaign, until this year it is expected that the McKinley and Bryan managers each will send out no less than a hundred million documents. Before the Garfield-Hancock campaign was half over the R-publicans and Democrats had sent out more than twelve million documents, and this style of campaigning has become more popular with each Presidential contest. The bulk of this matter is sent by express to the chairmen of the various State committees for distribution. A great deal of it goes free, being franked from Washington. Speeches delivered in Congress by Republicans and Democrats constitute a large part of the campaign matter, and Republicans and Democrats alike take advantage of this opportunity to get to the voters speeches favorable to their side in the contest. Each national committee sends out five million buttons and five million lithographs, all of which are distributed through the State chairmen of the two parties.

To follow the movements of Senator Hanna or Senator Jones for twenty-four hours is to get an insight into what is probably the greatest problem of organization ever known. Shrewd, far seeing men who organize trusts or other great enterprises have comparatively simple tasks with which to cope. These two great generals of the campaign of 1900 are organizing machinery as complete and substantial as though they expected never to do anything else but elect Presidents. If they were organizing hundred year Presidential clubs they could not be more thorough and systematic.

The national chairman maps out the work and divides great responsibilities among his immediate assistants. They in turn divide their work so that a dozen or twenty or a hundred men will look after the details. These men in turn assign important tasks to hundreds of party workers under them. After the campaign is well under way the minor workers report to their superiors, as a lieutenant in the army reports to his captain. The captain in turn reports to his major, the major to his colonel and the colonel to his general, Senator Hanna or Senator Jones, as the case may be. When a situation arises down the line that threatens trouble Senator Hanna or Senator Jones hears of it and devises some plan of averting the danger. He then directs his subordinates to see that the plan is tried and requires full explanations for failure.
